April Meeting

Monday, 4/16 at 7pm at the J.C.C.

Jack Radcliffe: Kayak Navigation

“Navigation is the art and science of figuring out where you are and how to safely get where you’re going.” Jack Radcliffe, owner of Ocean State Adventures in Bristol, will start his discussion with the basic principles and tools of navigation, then continue with navigation as it relates specifically to kayaks. “Seat-of-pants” and “rule-of-thumb” calculations figure prominently in kayak navigation, where access to, and employment of unwieldy or unreliable gear is problematic. Why learn this ancient craft when your GPS can lead you anywhere? Because the best piece of technology is worthless when the batteries die—or you drop it overboard.

Directions to the Jewish Community Ctr., 401 Elm Grove Ave., Providence: From Rt. 95 South take Exit 24 & turn left onto Branch Avenue. (From Rt. 95 North take Exit 24 & turn right onto Branch Ave.) Go past Benny’s. Cross North Main Street and continue up the hill (past Kentucky Fried Chicken). At the top of the hill cross Hope St. and continue one block to the end at Morris Ave. Go left, then immediately right onto Sessions St. Go down the hill to Elm Grove Ave. The JCC will be across the street.

The RICKA Spring Soiree

The club would like to extend sincere thanks to the following companies for their generous donations of merchandise to the RICKA auction:

Great Canadian Canoe Company in Sutton, MA;
Ocean State Adventures in Bristol;
Canoe Passage Outfitters in Warren, RI and Taunton, MA;
Blackstone Valley Outfitters in Cumberland; and
The Kayak Centre in Wickford.

Your support of RICKA’s programs is deeply appreciated!

MEMBERSHIP RENEWALS

Are you one of the many (many, many, many) RICKA members who’s forgotten to renew? If so, you’re reading this online, because you no longer receive mail/email from the club. While you’re online, just click on “Join the Fun” to download a membership renewal form....and, like it says, join the fun!

LETTER

Regarding last month's letter from Eben Oldmixon about recent trip reports:

I think Eben Oldmixon raises a valid concern, but he misses the point of passing along the stories he mentioned. RIC/KA has been very lucky to not have had many serious accidents in its long history. Kayaking is an inherently risky activity and injury, even death, are always a real possibility. Along with lady luck, the RIC/KA membership itself has a large hand in minimizing the chances of a serious accident.

* The level system forces paddlers to consider the amount of exposure they are comfortable taking compared to their level of skill and experience.

* Trips are modified based on conditions at the launch. There have been many trips where the paddle has been modified to lessen the risk to an acceptable level. In fact one of the trips he mentioned was changed to account for conditions.

* Most leaders are very cognizant of the skill-level of the whole group and works to stay within it.

* Most RIC/KA paddlers use sound judgement about when to paddle.

* As a club we offer a lot of opportunity for paddlers to hone their skills.

We also share the tales of paddles gone wrong. This is done to foster discussion about the judgments made by the people involved, to raise awareness of the possible conditions in the area, and to remind people that even smart, experienced, and skilled paddlers can get into trouble. The hope is that by reading these stories paddlers will be able to use the experiences of others to make better judgments about when to paddle and how to avoid serious trouble.

It must also be pointed out that the majority of trips that RIC/KA organizes are tame compared to the three mentioned in the article. Individual paddlers may seek out a rocky outcropping to play near, but that is often the extent of it. It is also worth mentioning that at least one of the paddles mentioned by Eben was rated as a level 4 trip and by its very nature a level 4 trip, particularly in the winter, has more risk than a level 2-3 trip in the summer. Let us all wish for continued luck, sanity in our own judgments, and the shared wisdom of the group to keep our paddles fun and safe. —Eric Johnson

AREA SHOPS & OUTFITTERS:

DO YOU HAVE A DEMO DAY (OR DAYS) COMING UP? LET OUR MEMBERS KNOW ABOUT IT! SEND AN EMAIL WITH DATES, TIMES AND LOCATIONS TO EDITOR @ RICKA.ORG.

The Rhode Island Canoe/Kayak Association (Rhode Island Canoe Association, Inc.), although safety conscious, cannot guarantee your personal safety in club activities. You are responsible for the adequacy of your own skills, training and equipment when engaging in or attending RICKA activities. A PFD—worn as intended by the manufacturer—is a requirement for all RICKA trips.

EXECUTIVE BOARD MEMBERS: TO ADVERTISE IN THE PADDLER

The next meeting is on Wednesday, April 4.

Send an email to: editor@ricka.org for rates, sizes and details.

The PADDLER is published monthly except December by the Rhode Island Canoe Association, Inc. It is mailed from Providence on the Thursday 1 1/2 weeks preceding the third Monday. It is not available by subscription, but is included in the cost of membership in the Association.

Final Words of Lost Kayaker Released; Family Asks for Inquest

Mar 10, 2007
The Epoch Times

AUCKLAND – A chilling tape of the final words of Australian adventurer Andrew McAuley has been released by New Zealand authorities. McAuley can be heard warning his kayak was sinking as he made a garbled plea for help to Maritime New Zealand.

The 39-year-old kayaker perished a short distance from New Zealand in February during his bid to be the first person to paddle across the Tasman. Maritime New Zealand released McAuley's final radio message to a television station in response to a request under the country's Official Information Act.

"My kayak's sinking," a clearly distressed McAuley told rescue authorities during one of the few parts of the conversation in which the Australian can be clearly heard. It is also believed he said: "I need a rescue."

"Kayak one this is maritime radio just confirm your kayak is sinking," maritime officials said in response. After a long pause came a short, unclear reply.

Authorities then asked what sort of assistance was needed, but again only a garbled reply was heard.

The message was sent to authorities on Friday, February 9, more than one month after McAuley left Tasmania in his craft.

McAuley's empty kayak was found the next day but his body was never recovered.

Spokeswoman for the McAuley family Jen Peedom said although Andrew's parents had heard part of the tape at the time of his death, they had only been given a copy in the past few days.

At the time of McAuley's death the family cast doubt on whether the voice on the tape was his, but Peedom said after listening to all of it they now were certain.

The tape's release came as authorities on both sides of the Tasman consider holding an inquest into the adventurer's death.

Tasmanian coroner Stephen Carey last week began an inquest before adjourning it to give his New Zealand counterparts time to decide whether they will examine the death.

Sergeant Tod Hollebon from Te Anau Police in New Zealand said it was still uncertain where an inquest into the death would be held.

"There are still discussions here with the coroner and the solicitor general as to whether one will be opened here," Hollebon said.

"There is a range of options. They would have one here and in Australia, they could have one just there or they could have one just here," he said. Peedom said the McAuley family wants an inquest to help reveal more about his fate.

Australian Paddlers Determined to Go Ahead with Tasman Sea Crossing

Tracey Findlay , The Hornsby
(Australia) Advocate

Mar 7, 2007

Two Australian adventurers are pressing ahead with their Trans-Tasman kayaking quest despite the fate of Sydney kayaker Andrew McAuley who perished at sea while attempting the same ocean crossing. James Castrission and Justin Jones were distraught at the tragic end to their fellow kayaker's dream.

"We were quite devastated (about Andrew) and we feel incredibly remorseful for his family and close friends," Mr Castrission said. However, this has not deterred them from embarking on their own 2200km journey across the Tasman Sea.

"Andrew's approach has been somewhat different to our approach," he said.

"It will be a very, very different crossing.

"We have a lot of confidence in our approach. We are definitely not going to get out there unless we are sure and confident that we are going to make the crossing to New Zealand."

He said their purpose-built kayak was designed for ocean travel and included a cabin area which provided space for safety equipment including a raft and survival suits. They were due to paddle out of Sydney Harbour in December but have delayed their departure until next summer to allow further modifications to their kayak. They are disappointed about the delay after many months of mental and physical preparation for the journey.

The delay came about after off-shore testing revealed steering

"It will be a very, very different crossing. We have a lot of confidence in our approach."

difficulties in high winds, possibly due to the size of the cabin.

"With a world first like this I guess these challenges are expected and it's just a matter of addressing them each in order," Mr Castrission said. Money raised from the Crossing the Ditch expedition is going to the Sydney Children's Hospital.

Protect Your Camera

Kayaks and cameras are not always a happy mix—but there are ways to safeguard your investment. Photographer and RICKA webmaster Alan August responds to a question from a member.

The best description of how I protect my camera is a couple photos. (What else would you expect from me?) The photo below tells most of the the story. I carry my camera in a dry bag held down by the deck bungies. The foam foot lifts the end up off the deck so the camera isn't being pressed against the deck. It was difficult to get the camera in and out until I added the foot.

There's a mini carabiner attached to the cord, and I clip it to one of the strap eyes on deck. There's a length of 5-inch PVC pipe inside the bag (photo at right). Without it the deck bungies would make it impossible to slide the camera in or out.

The first time I tried it the rough end wore through the bag. It is now padded with foam, and I use a heavier bag with a reinforced foot. As you can see in the photo I found some scrap foam and wrapped it around the top of the pipe as well. It extends slightly beyond the end of the PVC to keep the camera body from rubbing on it.

I haven't yet learned whether there's enough air and foam in the bag to float the camera. I used to use a padded ammo box in my whitewater canoeing days and it definitely floated. It took a heck of a beating while the camera just tumbled against the foam inside the box.

Below: Dry bag, pipe and padding...and the camera, of course.

Above: looking into the dry bag.

The Fourth Annual River Run will take place on Saturday, June 16, 2007 rain or shine.

Come out and play on the Westport River. Kayakers and canoers will be able to participate in either a family-fun course or a competitive paddle, beginning at Hix Bridge and finishing at the Head of Westport.

If you don't have a boat, kayak rentals are available on race day at a discounted price from Osprey Sea Kayak Adventures. Transportation of kayak to race start is included. Call Osprey Sea Kayak at 508-636-0300 to reserve.

If you would rather help volunteer for the race call WRWA 508-636-3016.

* Prizes awarded in a variety of classes.

* Registration begins at 8:30 AM

* Challenge Race at 10 AM

* Family Fun Race at 10:30 AM

Call WRWA 508-636-3016 for entry details.

Once again we will be camping at Rollins Pond state campground. You can visit their website at <http://www.dec.state.ny.us/website/do/camping/campgrounds/rollins.html>

The trips are suitable for any type of canoe or kayak. However, some of the longer trips are more suited to sea kayaks or touring canoes. As in the past, the trips will be decided by a group vote the night before. Camping reservations for Rollins Pond state campground can be made at www.reserveamerica.com. Sites A01 – A31 are on the water and would be your first choices. For more information, contact trip leader Henry Dziadosz—henry@twincitysupply.com

WHITEWATER TRIPSSunday, April 22
1:00 PM*Willimantic River (RSVP)
West Willington, CT

RSVP required. Please contact leader - Bill Luther Prijon@juno.com 508-761-7961 or Erik Eckilson eckilson@cox.net 401-765-1741

We will put in at Nye-Holman State Park (Route 74) and take out at the bridge on Mellow Road – about 5 miles. At high water levels this is a quickwater trip with tight turns and a few play spots. At lower water levels it may be scratchy. This is a beginner trip, but prior quickwater experience is required - you must have directional control of your boat at all times. Appropriate cold water paddling gear (wetsuit/drysuit) is also required. The trip will be cancelled due to low water.

Directions from Route 6 in RI: From Route 6 West, bear right onto Route 101. Follow Route 101 west until it becomes Route 44. Continue on Route 44 west to the intersection with Route 74. Bear right on Route 74. After you pass Route 32, begin looking on the right for the entrance to Nye-Holman State Park. Put-in is down the entrance road to the right. If you cross over I 84, you have gone too far. From I 84 in CT Take Exit 69 (Route 74) toward Route 44/Putnam. After .3 miles, turn left into Nye-Holman State Forest. Put-in is down road to right.

Conservationists go to war against phragmites

By Dan Atkinson , Staff Writer
Daily News of Newburyport

NEWBURY - The Great Marsh is being invaded. Not by tourists, not by al-Qaida, not by Martians - but by plants.

"The reality of the situation is very grave," conservationist Geoff Walker said yesterday at a meeting of the Parker River Clean Water Association. "We are virtually at war."

Walker and fellow conservationist Peter Phippen were discussing the spread of phragmites, a tall reed that has been in the marsh and visible along Route 1 for many years. However, those dense patches are not alone. Nearly twice as many less-dense stands of phragmites - about 120 - have appeared in the marsh over the past two years, suggesting that the plant is spreading.

Phragmites can grow up to 6 feet tall, and their clusters can be so dense that they are impassable. The reeds crowd out other plant life and trap freshwater, Walker said. They can significantly change the ecosystem of the marsh, which sees 70 percent of the East Coast's migratory birds and is home to hundreds of species of wildlife, Phippen said. Plus, they are sort of ugly.

"We have to get rid of what's there now before it gets to a level where we can't control it," he said.

Phippen and Walker have spent the last few summers marking the emerging strands of phragmites, but they can only remove them through "mowing and aerial spray," Walker said. They are applying for grants to eradicate the plants, and they said people should write to their planning boards and conservation committees and encourage them to help take down the reed.

Nancy Pau, a biologist for the Parker River Wildlife Refuge, has had more success getting rid of perennial pepperweed. The white-flowered plant first came to the area in the 1930s, Pau said, and it also grows in dense amounts that allow no other plant life. Pau has used herbicide on infestations, which does a good job of stopping growth in particular areas for several years. However, the weed spreads rapidly.

"We treat it with chemicals, which keep plants from coming in, but we keep finding it in new spots," Pau said.

So last year, Pau and 70 volunteers, including students from Newburyport High School, spent a week yanking the pepperweed out by its roots. They concentrated on the Pine Island area and pulled more than two tons of the weed out of the marsh.

Pau is looking for volunteers to help mark infestations of the weed this spring and pull it later in the summer. She can be contacted at 978-465-5753.

BLACKSTONE VALLEY PADDLERS

Blackstone Valley Paddlers' first paddle of the season is on May 15th.

Join us for our 7th season when we explore a different waterway every Tuesday night in the Blackstone River Valley. Improve your paddling skills, find the best paddling locations in the valley, learn about water quality, and enjoy a relaxing evening on the water. Meet at 6:15 PM each Tuesday night May through August. The Blackstone Valley Paddle Club was formed by the John H. Chafee Blackstone River Valley National Heritage Corridor, in conjunction with the Rhode Island Canoe and Kayak Association. Great Canadian Canoe & Kayak Company is the vendor of choice for the Blackstone Valley Paddle Club. To participate in the Blackstone Paddler's Events, RI Canoe and Kayak Association membership is required, as is an additional $10.00 BVPC membership fee. The $10.00 Blackstone Valley Paddle Club membership fee is good for the entire 2007 season. If you are a current RICKA member, come to a Blackstone Paddler's event and you may join for the additional $10.00 membership fee at your first event. If you are not yet a RICKA member, you may join and pay your dues for both RICKA and Blackstone Valley Paddle Club at your first paddle. You may also print out the application and join at any time ! Please make checks payable to RICKA.
